REFLECTION

Reflection Fifth Sunday of Easter Year C

In today’s Gospel we are taken to the Upper room and the scene of the Last Supper. Jesus tells his Disciples to “Love one another.” This is how others will know that they are Disciples of Jesus.

As a child I can remember being told by my Great Aunt that I looked just like my Grandfather. I spent the next week looking in the mirror and looking at a portrait of him to see if that was the case. I can also remember the first time I heard my voice after it had been recorded and suddenly realised that I actually had a London accent. There are certain things that identify us with our families and our background. So how do people know that we are Christians, what defines us in our world today.

As a community we need to try and show that Love of Jesus to others. More than ever we need to show love for each other, love for God and at present love and respect for the World in which we live. In Cornwall we have the beauty of creation all around us, we must never take this for granted, it is something we need to preserve.

It is through this love that we are able to “put fresh heart...” into one another from generation to generation.
